

The Curious

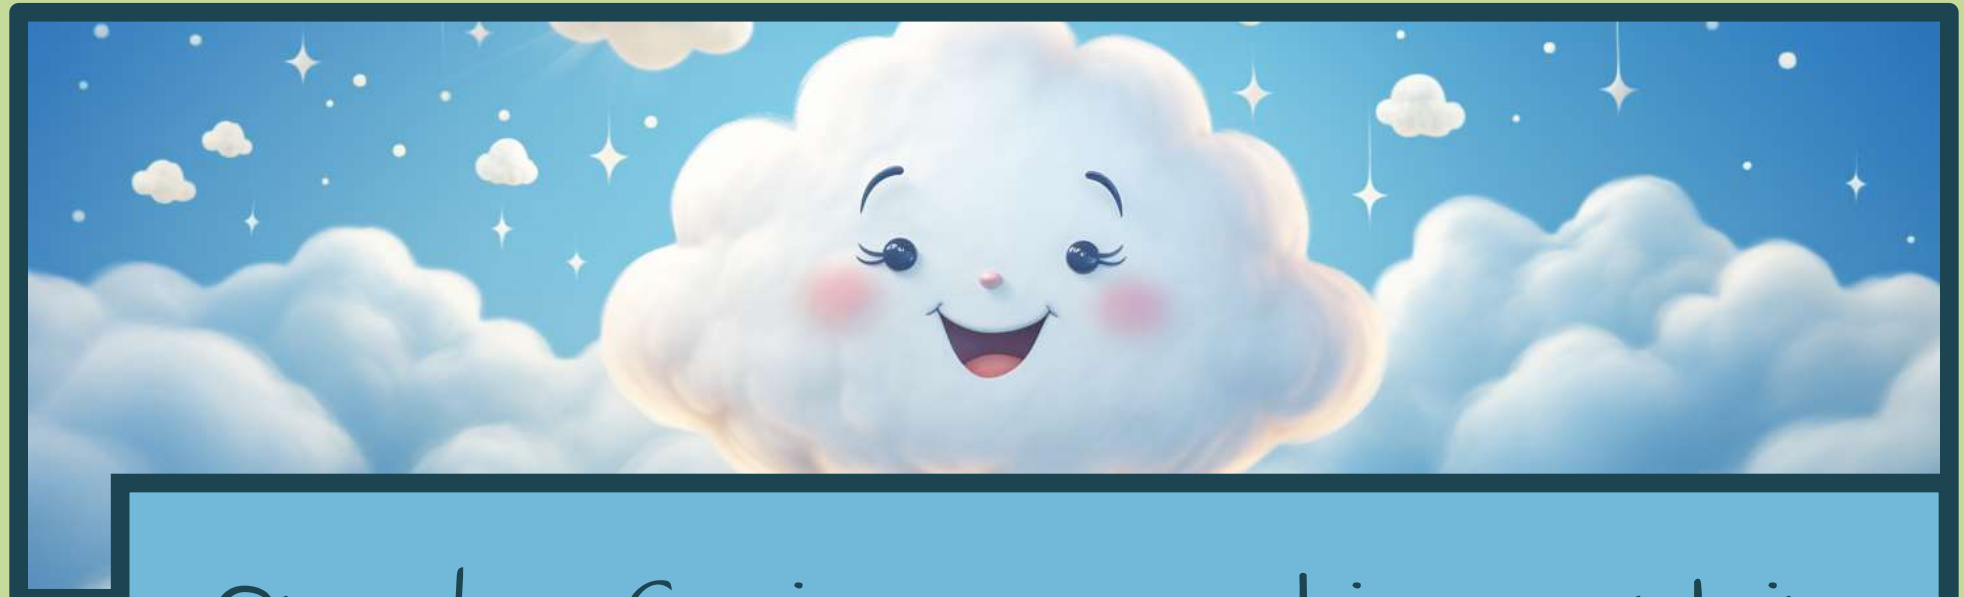

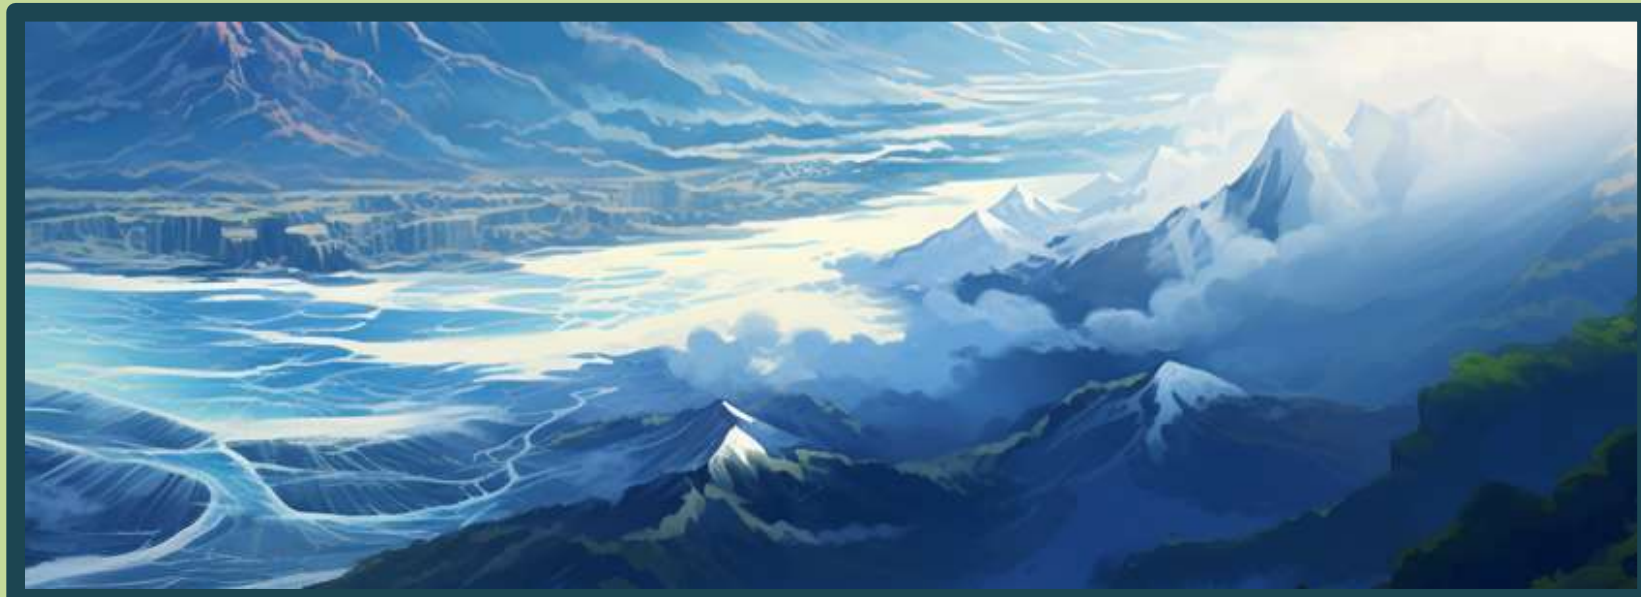

Cloud

Learning to Ask Questions

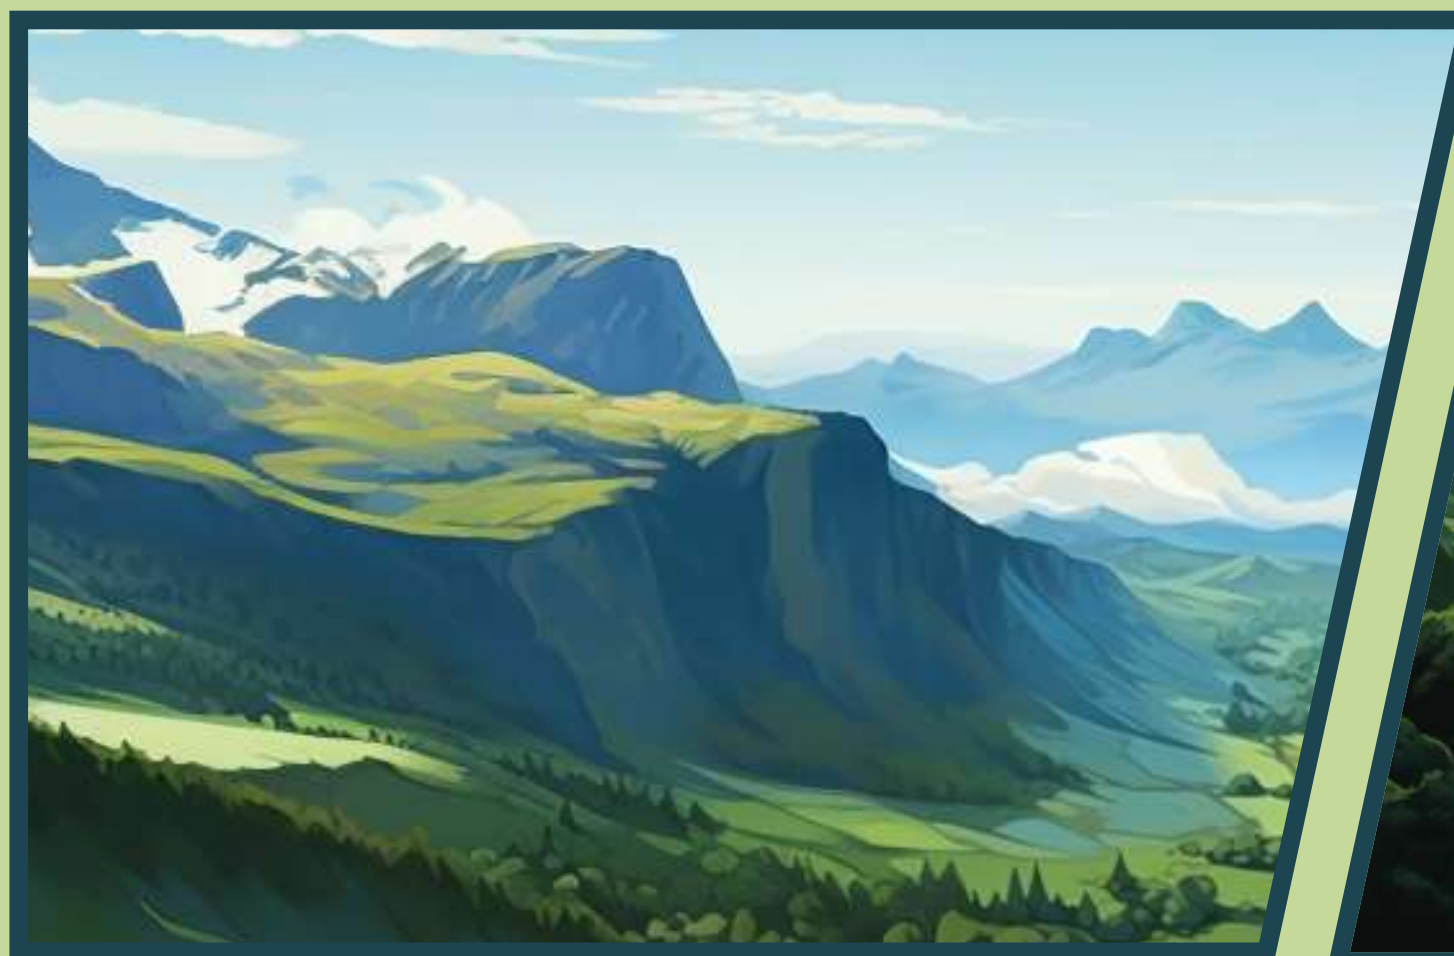

Once upon a time, there was a fluffy cloud named Curious. Curious liked to float high in the sky and watch the world below.

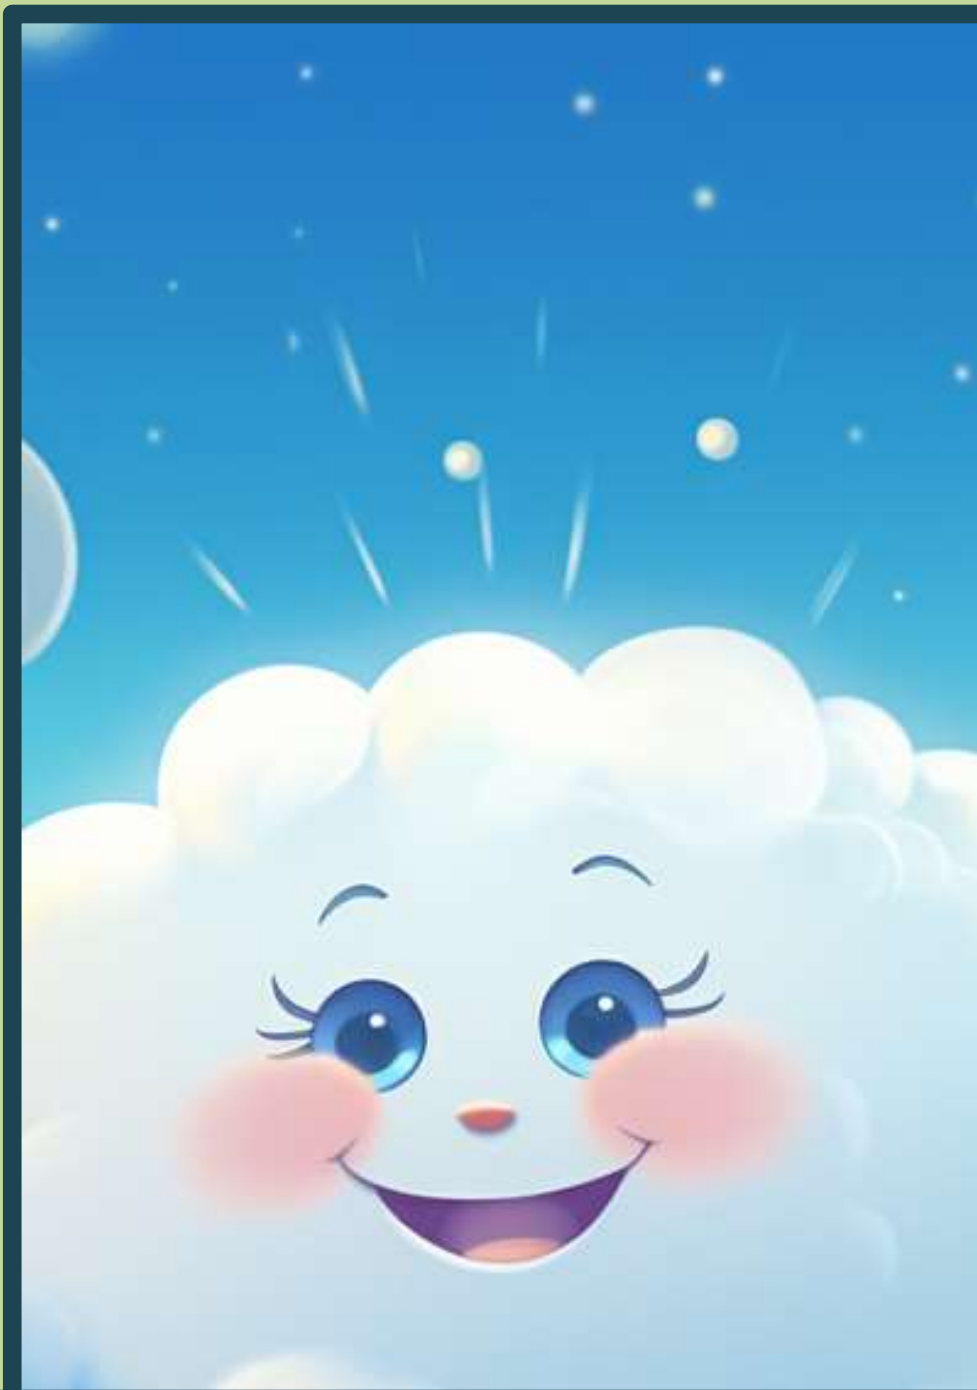

One day, Curious saw a big mountain covered in snow. "Why is the mountain white?" wondered Curious.

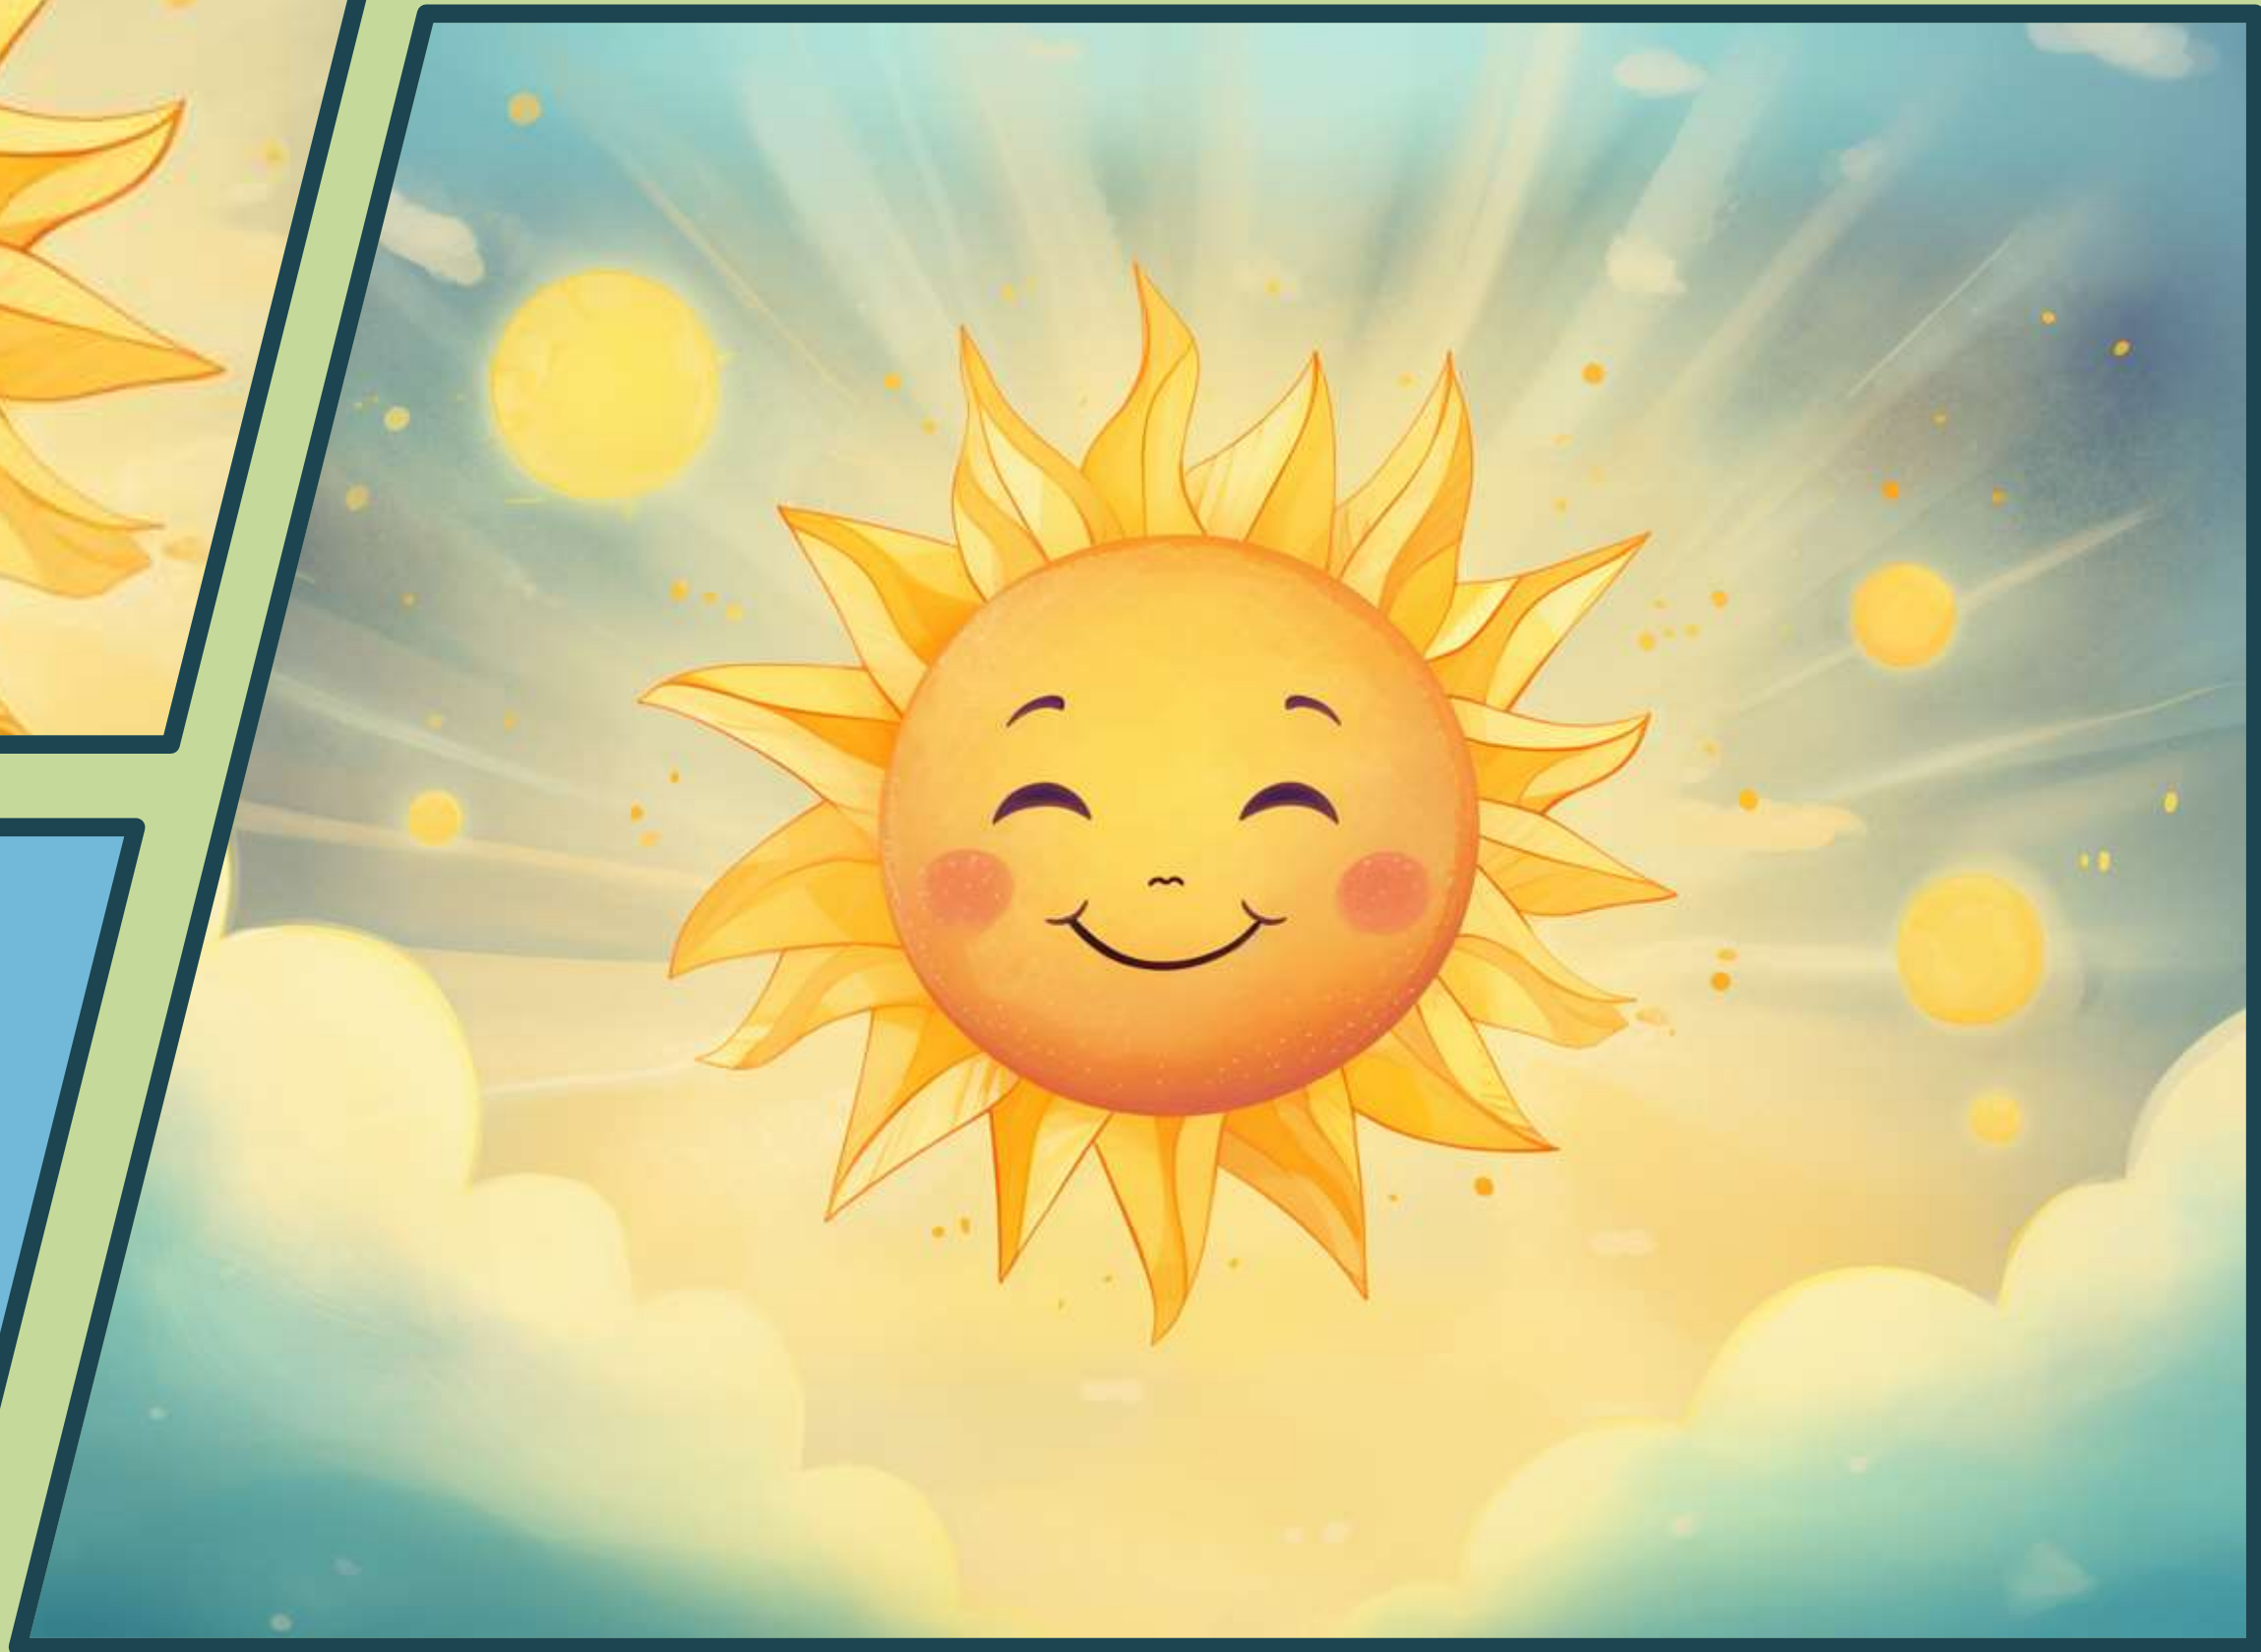

Then, Curious
saw a river
flowing through the valley. "Why does the river move?" Curious asked.

Curious didn't know the answers, but instead of feeling sad, Curious felt excited. "I will ask the Sun," thought Curious.

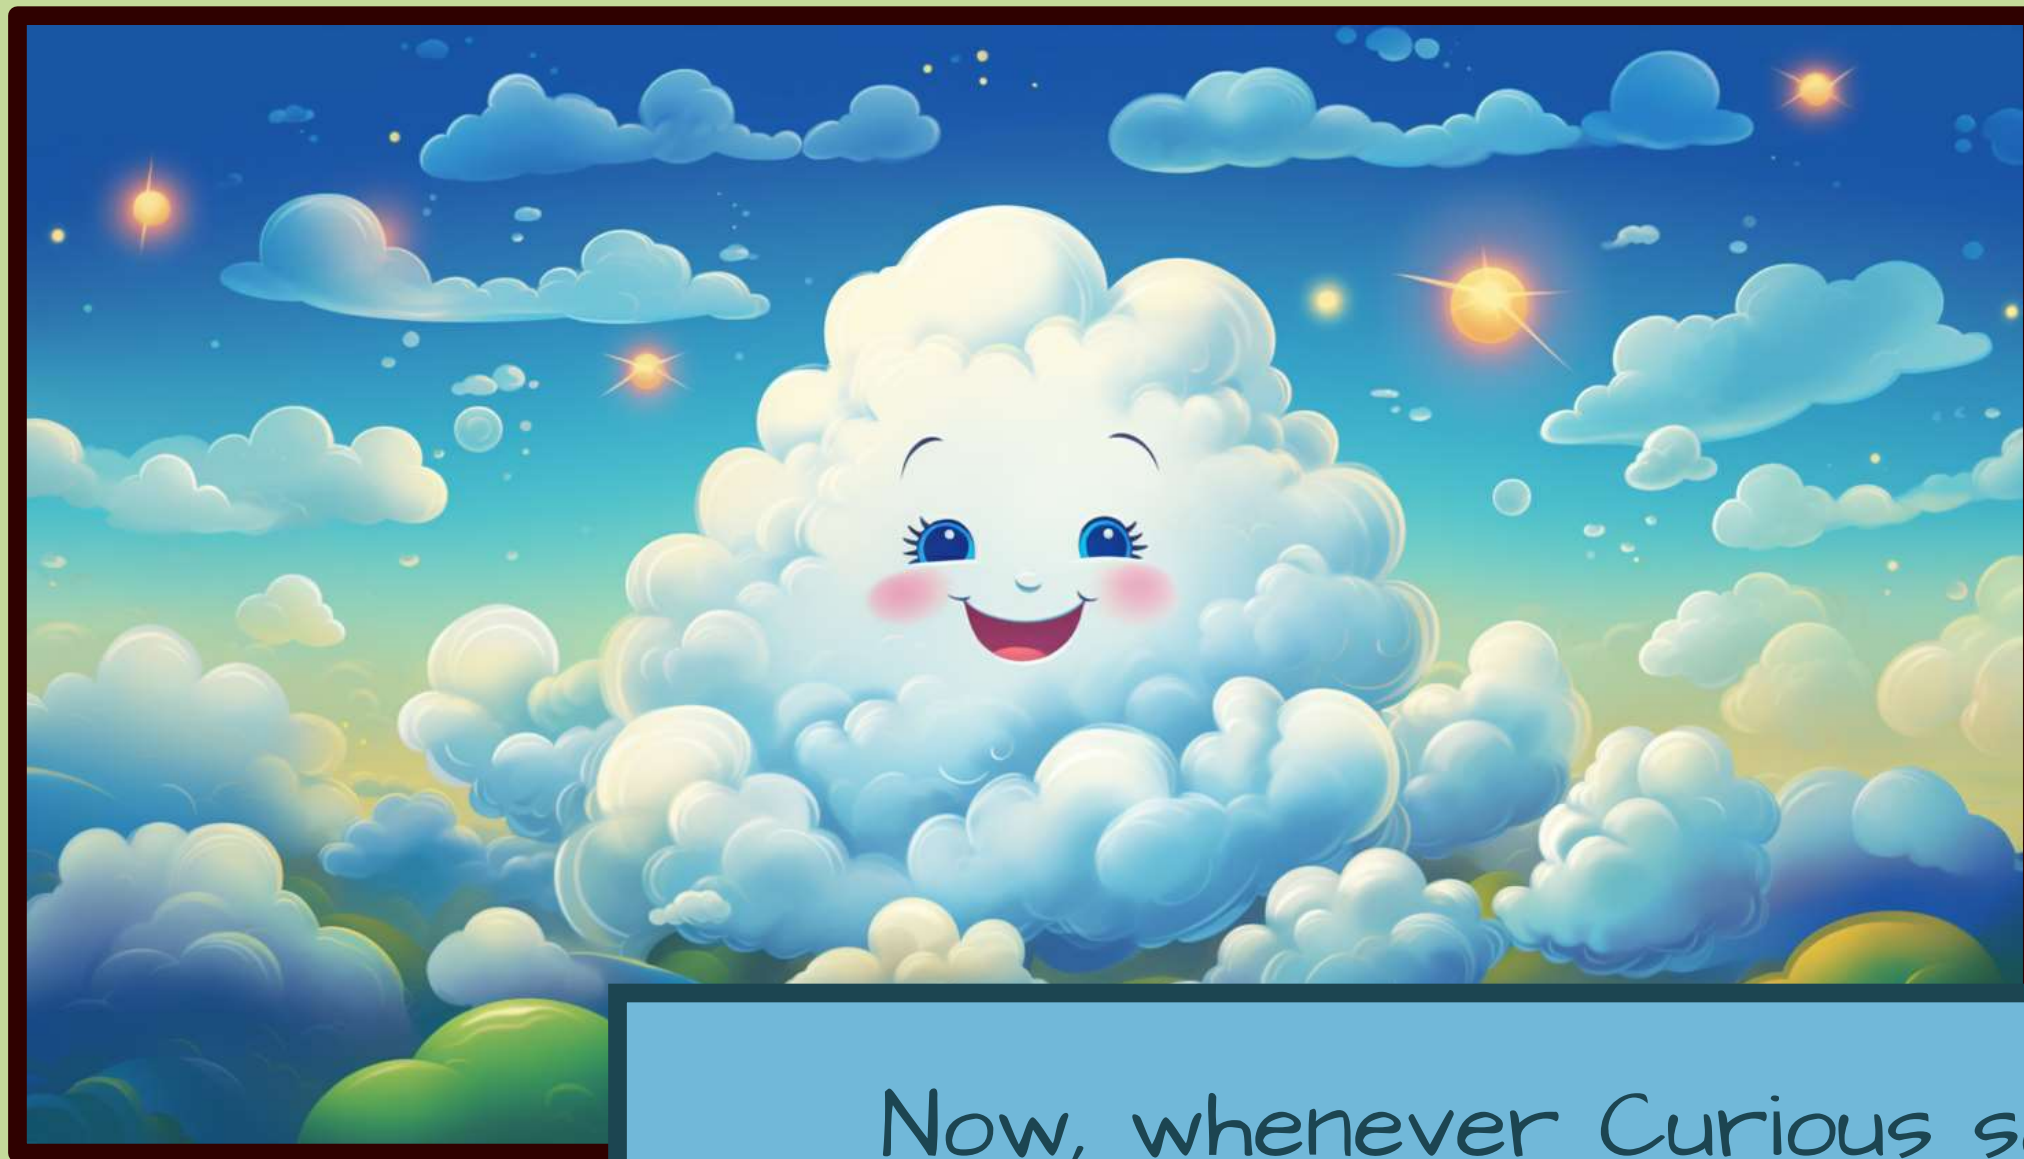

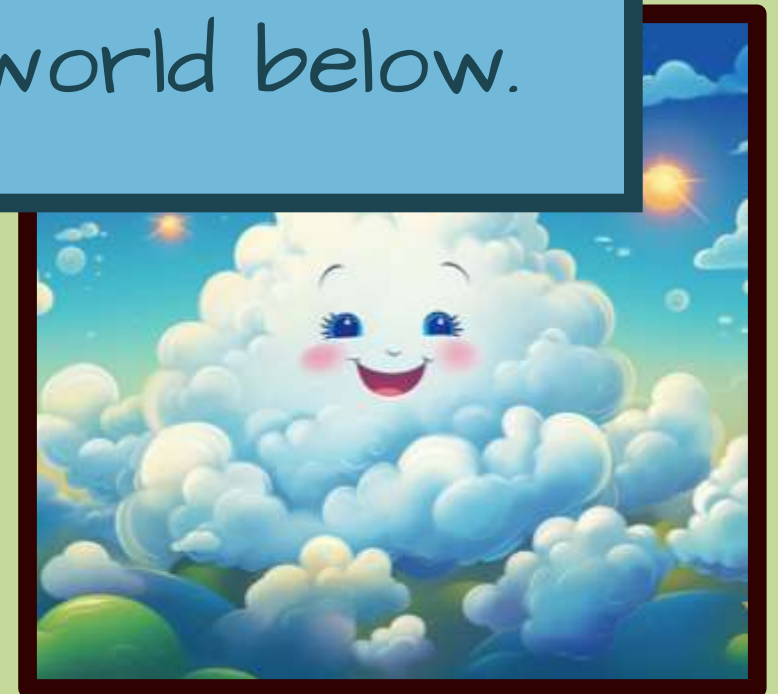

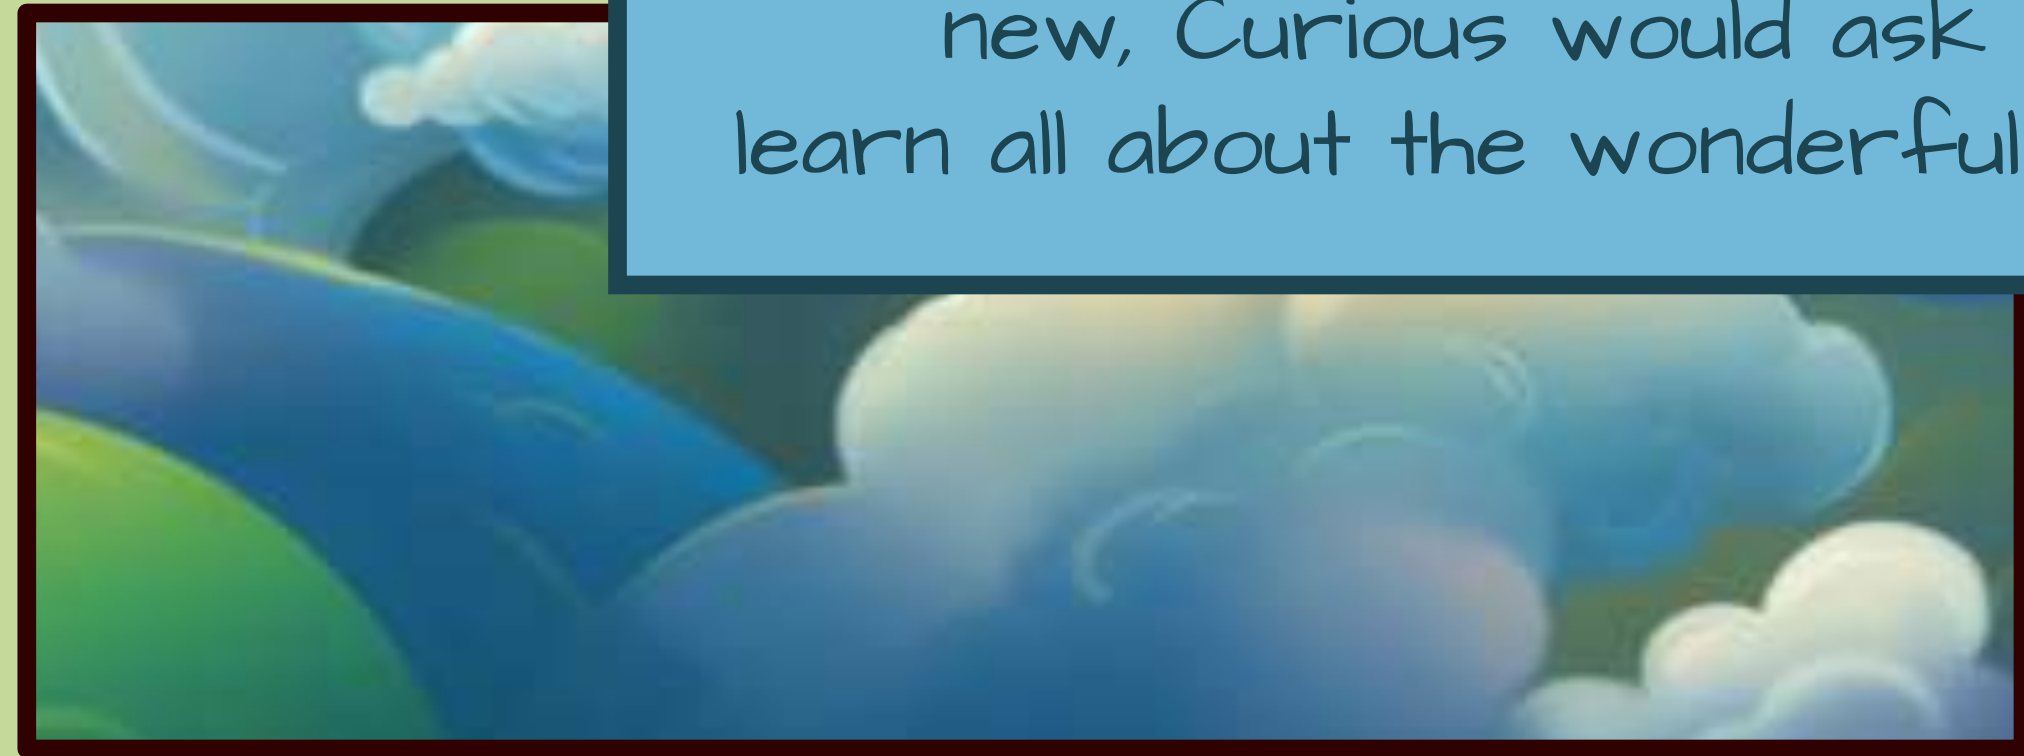

The Sun smiled and said,
"Mountain is white from snow, and river moves to reach the sea."

Curious was happy with the answers.

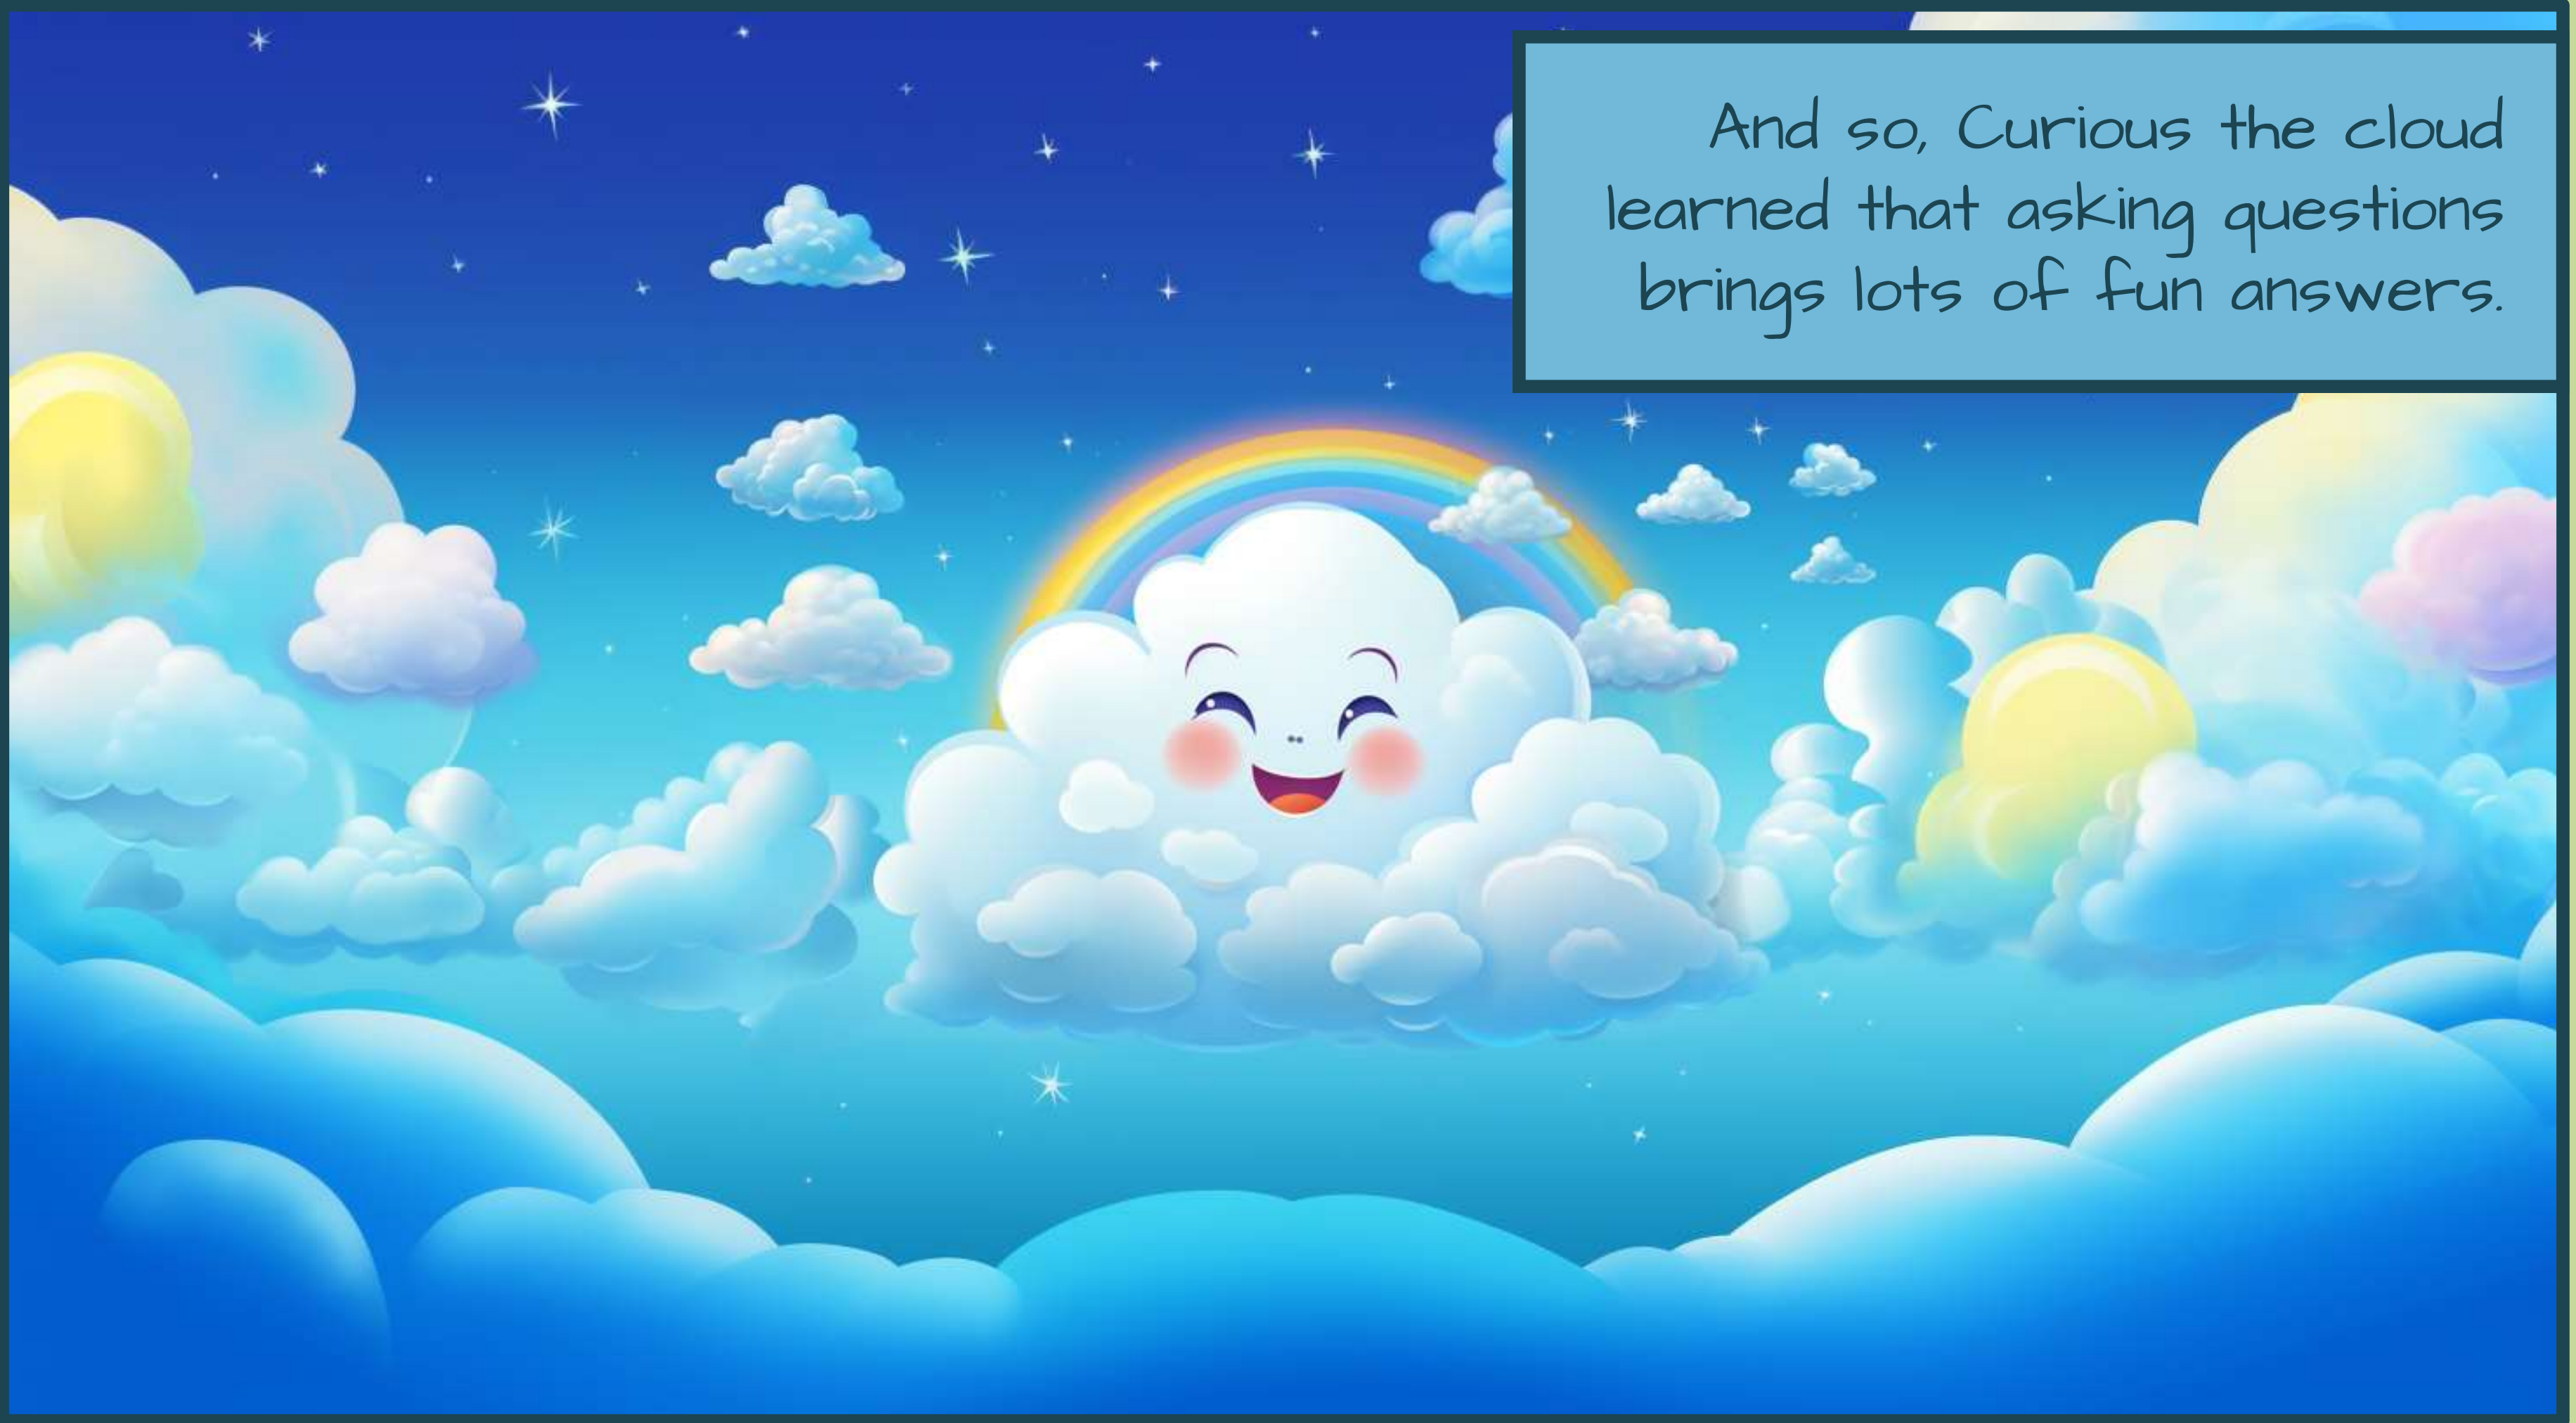

Now, whenever Curious saw something new, Curious would ask questions and learn all about the wonderful world below.

And so, Curious the cloud learned that asking questions brings lots of fun answers.
