Once upon a time

there was a naughty
dwarf named Tom.

Tom loved to play tricks on his forest friends. He would hide their things and giggle when they looked for them.

Tom's friends didn't like his naughty tricks. They felt sad and asked him to stop, but Tom didn't listen.

One day, Tom got into trouble. He accidentally fell into a deep hole in the forest. He felt scared and realized he needed help.

Tom called out, "Help!
Help! Can
anyone hear
me?"

His forest
friends heard
his cries and
rushed to the hole. They worked together to pull Tom out
safely.

Tom was thankful for his friends' help. He felt bad for being naughty and making them sad. He said, "I'm sorry for my naughty tricks. I'll change and be a good friend from now on."

His friends forgave him and gave him another chance.

Tom started doing nice things for his friends. He shared his snacks and helped them find lost things. He even told funny jokes to make them laugh.

His friends saw
the change in Tom, and they liked the new kind dwarf.

As time passed, Tom's kindness spread to other creatures in the forest. He became known as the friendly dwarf who always helped others.

Tom felt happy inside, knowing that being kind was much better than being naughty.

And so, the naughty dwarf Tom learned to be kind, and he and his forest friends lived happily ever after.
