In the imperial era, there lived a tough boy named Jack.

Jack resided in a grand palace
and loved to help people around him.

One day, the emperor's garden
was full of fallen
leaves.

Jack grabbed a broom and started sweeping them away.

He saw the palace servants struggling to carry heavy boxes.

Jack ran to help them,
making their work easier.

When he heard a little girl crying, he rushed to her side. She had lost her doll.

Jack searched everywhere until he found it, bringing a smile to her face.

The emperor noticed Jack's kindness and bravery. He made Jack his special helper, and Jack was so happy.

Jack continued to help people with a big heart. He made everyone in the imperial era feel cared for and loved.

A vibrant, painterly illustration of a young boy with dark, curly hair running joyfully along a dirt path in a garden. He is wearing a light-colored jacket, dark trousers, and brown shoes. The path is flanked by lush greenery, including large trees with dense foliage and various flowers, some of which are orange and yellow. In the background, a grand, classical-style building with multiple domes and columns stands under a bright, cloudy sky. Numerous orange and yellow leaves are shown falling from the trees, creating a sense of autumn. The overall atmosphere is warm and hopeful.

And so, Jack's love for helping people in the imperial era taught him that kindness and helping others can make the world a better place.
