*In an old village, there lived a kind boy named Ming.
Ming loved to help people and be friends with everyone.*

Every morning, Ming would greet his neighbors with a big smile. He would help the elderly carry their bags and play with the children.

The village had a big garden where everyone grew their food. One day, a strong wind knocked down some plants.

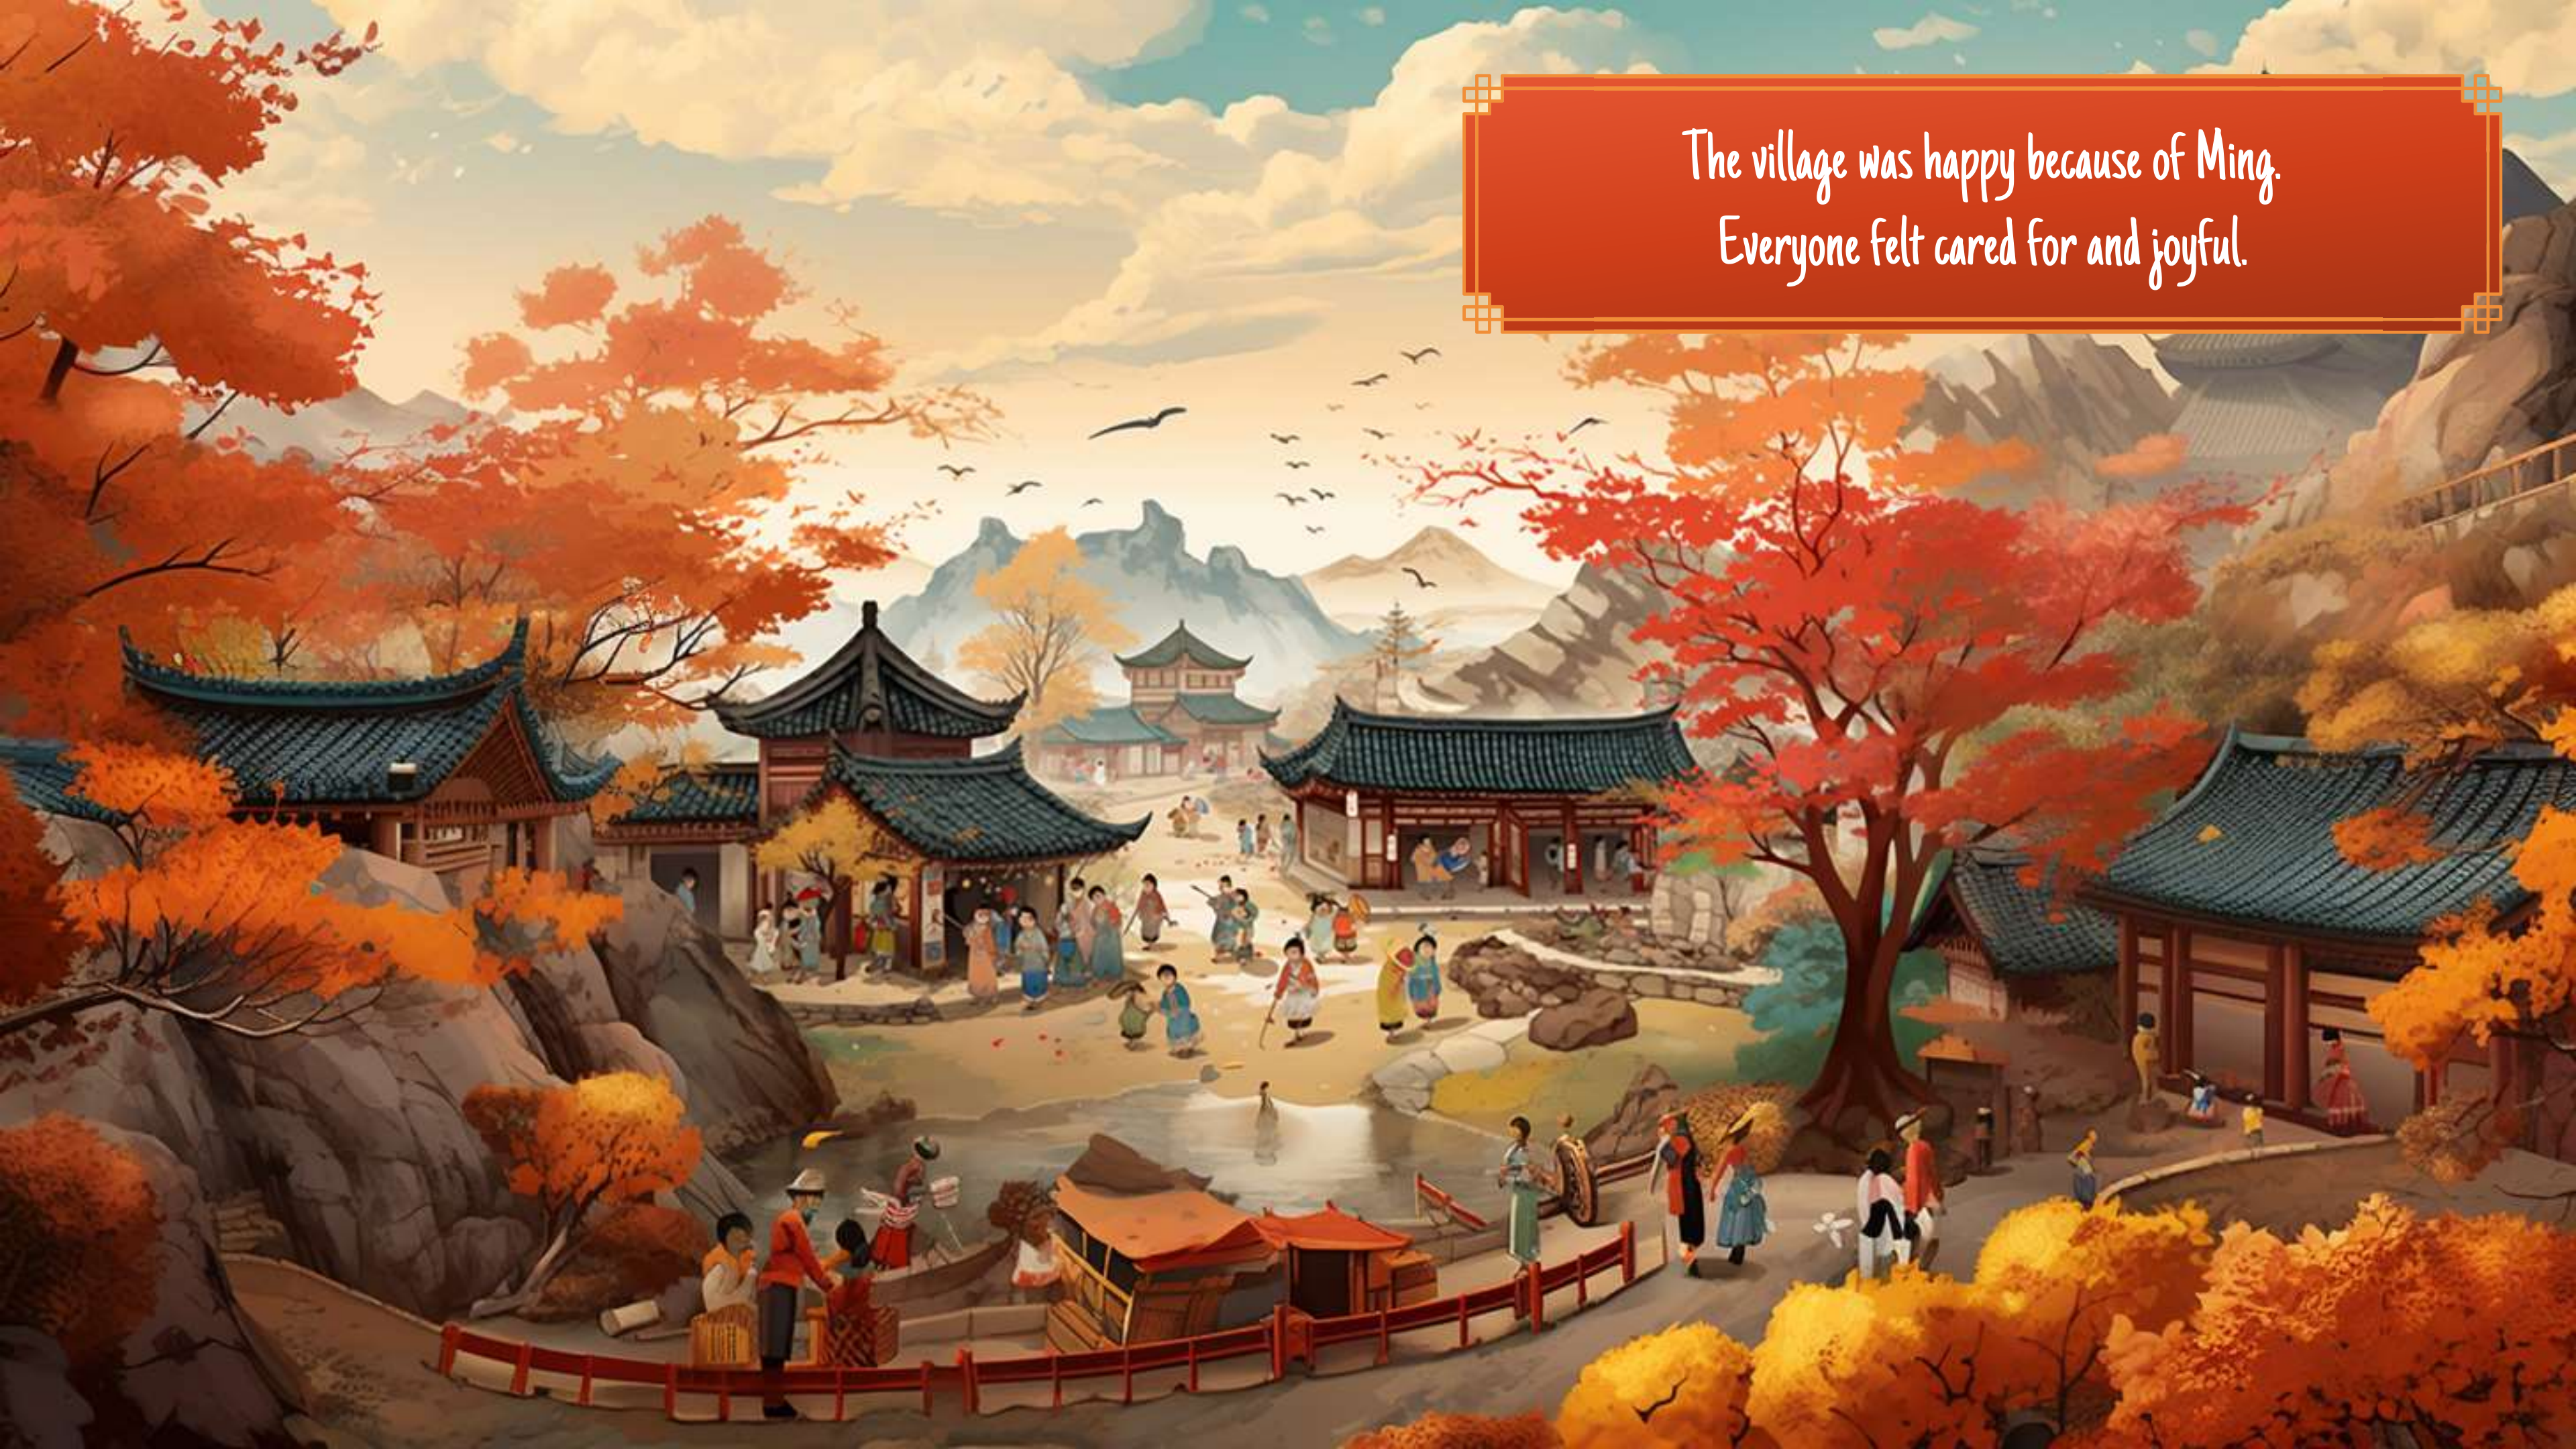

Ming and his friends quickly picked up the plants and put them back. They worked together and saved the garden.

Ming also liked to share. He shared his toys with the other children and his food with the hungry animals.

The village was happy because of Ming.
Everyone felt cared for and joyful.

And so, the story of the helpful boy, Ming, in the old village, taught us the wonderful value of helping others and making friends.
