IN A TOWN

where cars and trucks talked like people, there was a car named Speedy. Speedy was fast and liked to zoom around. He thought he was the best.

One day, the vehicles had a race. Speedy raced against his friends - Red the Fire Truck, Daisy the School Bus, and Max the Tow Truck.

Speedy sped ahead,
leaving everyone
behind. He thought he was going to win.

But suddenly, his wheel hit
a rock, and he tumbled
off the road.

Speedy was stuck,
unable to move. His friends rushed to help
him. Max used his strong tow rope to lift Speedy back onto
the road.

Speedy felt embarrassed and sad. He had been too proud and speedy. Now he was in trouble because of it.

Red, Daisy, and Max told Speedy that being fast wasn't the most important thing. They said it's better to be careful and help each other.

Speedy realized his mistake. He thanked his friends for saving him and promised to slow down and be more considerate.

From that day on, Speedy drove with caution. He learned that being kind and taking things at the right speed was better than rushing and being arrogant.

And so, Speedy's incident taught him a valuable lesson about humility and caring for others.
